ULTRASOUND – PERIANAL / ANORECTAL REGIONTechnique:

High-frequency linear transducer transperineal ultrasound examination of the perianal and perirectal region was performed.

Findings:

A linear hypoechoic fistulous tract is noted arising from the anal canal at approximately 12 o'clock position, extending towards the perianal skin with external opening, measuring approximately 2.6 – 3.1 cm in length.

The tract shows internal echoes with surrounding inflammatory changes, suggestive of infected fistulous tract.

A small localized hypoechoic collection with internal debris is seen along the tract near the external opening, measuring approximately 1.6 × 1.3 cm, suggestive of localized perianal abscess / infected cavity.

Mild surrounding soft tissue edema and inflammatory changes are noted in the perianal subcutaneous tissues.

At the posterior anal canal (approximately 3 o'clock – 9 o'clock position), linear mucosal defect with surrounding edema is noted, suggestive of anal fissure.

Anal sphincter complex appears thickened with spasm, however no definite sphincter disruption is noted.

No deeper ischiorectal or supralelevator collection is identified on the present examination.

Impression:

- Perianal fistulous tract (fistula-in-ano) with external opening at approximately 12 o'clock position, showing features of active inflammation / infection.
- Associated small perianal abscess / infected cavity along the tract.
- Associated posterior anal fissure (fissure-in-ano) with surrounding inflammatory changes.
